

To assume that the american public does not care what broadcasters do is simply wrong. Why should we record everything we do when a phone call of a complaint will suffice. If a broadcaster makes a mistake the public will notify the fcc. As they should. I am a one man operation here. If I have to spend my time recording what I put over the air, I won't have time to do the things radio is really good at like broadcasting local sporting events. I can't do that if I am required to be here recording what we are doing. Where are we supposed to store these tapes? Do we send them to the fcc? Is someone there going to listen to every radio station tape sent in. If so you will create an awful lot of jobs at the fcc. I know that the fcc is trying to do something positive but trust me, this is not it. Sincerely,
